

TSL Supply HD Audio For Asian Games

TSL Professional Product Group has announced that it will supply 42 of its AMU1-CHD+ high definition audio monitors to GAB, which is building the broadcast facilities for the 2010 Asian Games.

The Games will be taking place in Changzhou, China from 12-27 November.

The 2010 Asian Games are the largest in the history of the games, with 476 events across 42 sports, including, for the first time, 20:20 cricket.

TSL's Professional Products Group General Manager Chris Exelby said: "GAB chose the AMU1-CHD+ because they need an efficient way to monitor the multiple languages embedded in an HD stream. This agreement is very exciting as it represents the culmination of more than three years of steady growth of TSL Professional Products in the Chinese marketplace. It is not only proof of our ability to access this important market, it gives us even greater exposure to broadcast professionals in the region."
